What's that road art

We all notice the markings on the road. While boards are the first eminent markings, the lines painted on the road also have their own story to tell. Listed below are the major road markings seen in our country

Centre line marking for a two-lane road with the road edge marked

Centre barrier line marking for a six-lane road without edges marked

Centre line marking for a two lane road without the edges marked

Centre barrier line marking for a four lane road without edges marked

You must stop and give way and priority to pedestrians at this point

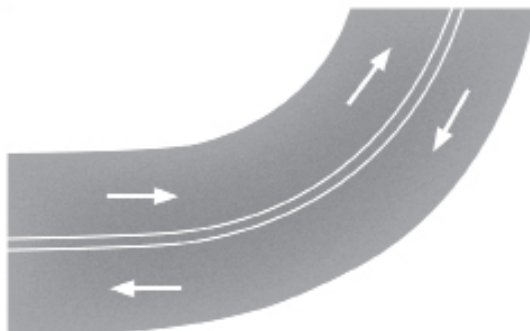

If the line on your side is broken, you may cross or overtake if safe enough

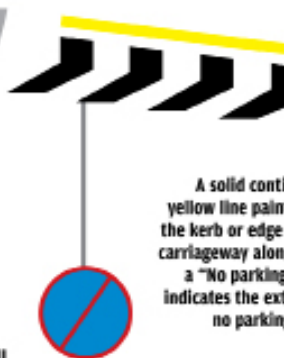

Lane line and broken centre line which allows overtaking

A stop line is a single solid line painted before the intersecting edge

Used where visibility is restricted. Crossing the line is not allowed at all

A solid continuous yellow line painted on the kerb or edge of the carriageway along with a "No parking" sign indicates the extent of no parking zone

The lines painted on the road have a lot to say. While some of them are just safety markings for motorists, others speak volumes in terms of whether you are allowed to overtake at a particular point or not and so on.

It is highly advisable for you to observe the rules imposed by these lines so that the flow of traffic on the road remains smooth. Also maintain the rules regarding the "Stop" lines. This allows smooth flow from other ends.

When you want control at the wheel, you need to keep your wheels in control.
